Men, Books, People & Things by Edgard Allan Poe

Some 13 years ago Miss Edith M. Thomas, then as now a poet of rare insight and reserve, said to me: "The present day cares for the 'strenuous' rather than the delicately beautiful in poetry. I am reminded of this fact in the admission of Mr. Henry as a poet. His recent volume everywhere meeting with approval of the critics, though it is, nothing if not strenuous. In my opinion it is for most part anything but poetry."

At this time few publishers would risk a book of verse the best of which might meet with scant reading and many, without the foresight of the few said that poetry never again would find its high seat in literature.

The advance of science has made poetry threesome to all but the unimportant verse. This is an age of prose, utilitarian enterprise. We have no patience with things of mere sentiment, fancy and emotion," said a critic.

The prophets, however, who, fortunately, are always with us did not take this gloomy view.

In a letter of Weir Mitchell which death now releases, he says: "In poetry it is much the same, melody gone mad. But there is a return to poetry—it is coming back."

After an appeal year was published the Publishers letter of Madison Cawein after the letter of Weir Mitchell in 1913 by Theophile, the prophet of the final issue: "which is inspiring a pleasant one to thank, and stirrings, touching, and endures to deeper letters they have seen of good poets. French newspaper—interest in years. To our public and our young men who represent old and young French 'Adieu' but 'Au Revoir,' confident we shall soon begin to defend with them the great causes that are dead to us in a resurgent and victorious France.

One of the greatest aids to commerce in China is the building of railroads. The country that will be opened up by the Szechwan-Hankow line is an empire in itself. The primitive transportation methods still utilized in the greater part of China hamper trade, and both natives and foreigners are anxious to secure more up-to-date transportation facilities.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Oct. 30.—Chairman Charles D. Hilles of the Republican National Committee, in a statement yesterday indicates the probable lines to be taken by the Republicans in the coming campaign. The administration's handling of European situation and of the Mexican question is also criticized, while the general failure of the Democratic party to live up to its promises of 1912 and fulfil its platform pledges comes in for liberal condemnation. These activities, together with the fact that the addresses of a number of Germans were found among her belongings, brought about her conviction.
